The Return of Nuclear Deterrence

We need a new rearmament debate!

- Media focal point
- A book for the changing times

144 pages, Dietz Publ., 18.00 €
Publication Date: June 2022

Nuclear deterrence was never really gone; it just faded into the background. In an era of new conflicts between major powers – such as Russia’s war against Ukraine to be specific – this topic has attained new meaning. However, NATO member Germany has a tendency of striving to avoid the military and political problems, as well as the moral dilemma, presented by nuclear deterrence. One thing must be crystal clear though: A new debate over the legitimacy of nuclear deterrence is absolutely necessary!

The use of atomic weapons is treated here as a hypothetical possibility. Nevertheless, the paradoxical nature of deterrence logic is rooted in the threat and willingness to deploy horrifying weapons in an effort to prevent, on an ongoing basis, war from breaking out between two governments with nuclear capabilities. The supporters of this approach see it as a guarantor of “nuclear peace”. And yet confidence in the deterrence system is rooted in problematic assumptions. Already during the Cold War, the application of mutual vulnerability as the basis for strategic stability was precarious at best. Both sides lived in constant fear of the other side’s “first strike” and of technological advancements that could threaten future strategic stability. How are we supposed to live with this today?

Mathias Brüggmann1001 Power. Soccer, Liquid Gas, Financial Empire

Qatar's fairytale rise from desert nation to global player

Small country, big politics: Qatar's global goals

- Media focal point
- Informative look behind the curtains
- Where Qatar invests its gas billions
- International correspondent for the Handelsblatt

200 pages, Dietz Publ., 20.00 €
Publication Date: October 2022

The World Cup and natural gas are currently putting Qatar in the global spotlight. But what do we know about this emirate on the Persian Gulf and its key players? Mathias Brüggmann has spent the past few decades reporting on the Middle East. He describes the rise of the nation from a backwater peninsula to the world's largest exporter of natural gas and one of the wealthiest countries in the world. From a pirate's nest in the shadow of Saudi Arabia and a pawn trapped between the Ottoman and British empires to an international hub for sports business and international diplomacy.

The World Cup in November and December 2022 will finally put the small desert nation of Qatar onto the international stage. Added to this are the billions Qatar has invested in the West as well as accusations of terrorist financing.

Brüggmann takes a differentiated look at these issues, in addition to those of corruption, FIFA, and the exploitation of guest workers. He describes the transformation and provides commentaries from decision-makers in the Qatar political realm, representatives from domestic and foreign companies and international organizations. A controversial and extremely fact-filled book that goes beyond clichés and prejudices.

Mathias Brüggmann, born in 1965, is an international correspondent for the Handelsblatt and commentator on Arabic TV channels. Since the 1990s, he has regularly spent time in the Middle East. He followed the Arab Spring in Cairo's Tahrir Square, before quickly moving on to Bahrain, Iran and Tunisia. He has been a repeat visitor to Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the UAE. Brüggmann currently lives in Berlin.

Europe is helplessly facing the geopolitical struggle between the US and China, Brexit developments, the refugee crisis, the Corona pandemic, and a recession. Nationalistic solo actions are undermining the great European peace project. The EU is threatening to fracture, and is divided between winners and losers, the rich and the poor, the well-educated and the disengaged. How can Europe continue to convince its voters of the EU's continuing validity? With honesty!

The Dutch historian René Cuperus has served as an advisor to numerous governments. He dispels seven central myths tied to utopian pro-EU federalists as well as xenophobic anti-EU populists. Cuperus provides a realistic overview of the EU's strengths and weaknesses, and makes one single demand: The European cooperative experiment must be reconceptualized! An intensive search for the right balance between the EU and its democratic member nations must stand at the center of this effort.

René Cuperus, born in 1960, works as a Senior Associate Fellow at the Dutch think tank Clingendael and as a Research Fellow at the Duitsland Instituut at the University of Amsterdam. He is also a political columnist for the news network RTLZ.

The New Right is striving for power within Europe. One of its strongest strategies: the instrumentalizing of history to secure its perspective in the minds of people. Myths about nations, their heroes and their struggles for independence are being leveraged to make nationalism and ethnocentric thinking socially acceptable again. What this indicates is that we need to battle for the past so that the liberal basis of our society can have a future.

In Germany, the Alternative for Germany party evokes over a millenia of glorious German culture. Matteo Salvini in Italy is stylizing himself in the tradition of his country's freedom fighters. Hungary's Viktor Orbán wants to lead his nation back to its "historical greatness". And even in the midst of the Corona crisis, the New Right is promoting the concept of a nationalistic renaissance as a solution. The populist illusion of "pure" homogenous societies is supposed to emerge as the future's political consensus. This book analyzes the New Right's strategies across Europe and also functions as a call to politicians and scholars, teachers and civil servants, to stand up to the misuse of the historical narrative.

Dr. Andreas Audretsch, born in 1984, political scientist, initially entered the work force as a radio journalist. He subsequently worked in the German Parliament, the Federal Ministry for Economics and Energy, the Office of the Federal President, and the Federal Ministry for Families. He is also a Policy Fellow with Das Progressive Zentrum think tank.

Dr. Claudia Christiane Gatzka, born in 1985, teaches on the faculty of Western European Modern and Recent History at Albert Ludwigs University in Freiburg. Prior to this, she taught at Humboldt University in Berlin. She received the Tiburtius Prize for Berlin Universities for her dissertation on democracy in Germany and Italy.

Egoism is a natural human characteristic, just as much as public spirit. Both must be in balance for a society to thrive. For many people, this balance no longer exists, and they are dominated by ruthless inconsiderateness. Front-line workers are attacked while on duty, people push to the front, thinking first and often solely of themselves. All of this is the result of the social order we have created.

This situation can be changed. We can alter our laws so that people in teams gain more than those who only think of themselves. In concrete terms: Those who care for others should have tax advantages. Those who work in social and other welfare jobs should receive more governmental support and have increased vacation benefits. Those who devote their time to others should profit in terms of their retirement benefits too. Policies like these would go far in bringing egoism and public spirit back into balance.

Erik Flügge, born in 1986, is a political strategist, lecturer and expert on the participatory process, as well as the executive director of the Squirrel & Nuts Society for Strategic Consulting. His books The Jargon of Dismay and A Church for the Many Instead of the Holy Remnant were SPIEGEL bestsellers. He is also the author of the ZEIT series “Jacob’s Work and Flügge’s Contribution”. Erik Flügge lives in Cologne.

Concept: Human

– Power, Freedom and Democracy in an Era of Artificial Intelligence

400 pages, Dietz Verlag, 26 €
Publication Date: March 2020

Human or algorithm - who is calling the shots for our future in this age of Artificial Intelligence? The power that digital corporations in Silicon Valley exert is astronomical, and this poses a serious threat to democracy and independence as we know them. Paul Nemitz and Matthias Pfeffer present an impressive analysis of how current attempts to implement an ethical regulation of Artificial Intelligence are too short-sighted and limited.

The authors provide a detailed examination of this topic, concentrating specifically on the role being played by the public sphere and the threats posed against journalism in the digital age. They call for a strict regulation of Artificial Intelligence and a reconceptualization of the principles that define humanity, which must be defended against the principles of the machine.

Paul Nemitz, born in 1962, now lives in Brussels. He is a principal advisor to the EU Commission's Directorate-General for Justice and Consumers. As the EU Commission's Director for Fundamental Rights, he was responsible for the introduction of the EU basic data protection regulations, the NSA Snowden inquiry, and the negotiation of the EU-US Privacy Shield.

Matthias Pfeffer, born in 1961, divides his time between Munich and Berlin. He works as an independent TV journalist and producer. Over the years, he held various other positions, including as the executive editor of Focus TV.

Winfried Veit

The Core of Europe –
A Strategy for the EU of Tomorrow

160 pages, Dietz Verlag, 16 €
Publication Date: May 2020

In this book, Veit explains succinctly and informatively how the internal stalemate within the EU has to be overcome in order for the union to become more democratic and effective in its decision-making processes. Europe needs a new core composed of a limited number of nations that are willing to make decisions. This core should be composed of countries like Germany, France and Poland. Similar to a locomotive, this core could carry the rest of the nations forward. This model would allow for a close alliance between this core and the countries of Great Britain and Turkey, which would not entail any extensive sacrifice of sovereign independence. This framework is critical in a world that seems to be heading off the rails.

The West and its allies are already seeing an erosion in their status. New geopolitical players like China, Russia and India are making inroads onto the world stage. By contrast, today's Europe is paralyzed by internal crises and diverging interests.

Dr. Winfried Veit, born in 1946, is a political scientist and publicist. Since 2007, he has also worked as a lecturer at the University of Freiburg. From 1976 to 2011, Veit was on the staff at the Friedrich Ebert Foundation. He was also the managing editor for the periodical Internationale Politik und Gesellschaft, and the head of the foundation's division on Eastern Europe and Central Asia.

Responsibility

– A New Collective Political Spirit for Times of Change

The end of the “I philosophy”

A gripping plea for a new “we consciousness”

176 pages, Dietz Verlag, 18 €
Publication Date: March 2020

The young liberal pioneer Nils Heisterhagen has analyzed the situation: What is missing from today's world is a holistic spirit. After all, only majorities can create actual change, which is impossible without a decisive commitment to philosophically republican policies that integrate as many people as possible into a collective political endeavor that will reconnect them at the same time. We require a republican concept of the We that will stand in opposition to the specter of the (neo-)liberal I philosophy.

The political Left needs to bring the material needs of the people back to the center of their policy framework. And the Left must also remind people of their obligations as citizens. They owe each other something, and this entails more than simply following the letter of the law. Every person bears a burden of responsibility: for themselves, others, and the common good.

Nils Heisterhagen, Ph.D., was born in 1988. He lives in Mainz, where he works as a publicist and author. He holds degrees in political science and economics from the universities of Göttingen and Hannover. In numerous articles and two books, he declared his alignment with the SPD party. Previously, he was a consultant for the SPD state parliamentary group in Rheinland-Pfalz, in addition to being a speech writer and consultant for the last two IG-Metall chairmen.

Let's Talk

- Substantiated discussion guidebook
- For successful political communication
- With many practical tips and examples

Talking beyond the boundaries of opinions

144 pages, Dietz Verlag, 18 €
Publication Date: September 2019

This book shows how we can successfully discuss controversial topics. Many people feel strong speechlessness. They find it difficult to talk to others beyond regional, gender or political boundaries of opinion. All research studies show that society is crumbling into partial public sectors that only communicate within their filter bubbles. This endangers societal cohesion and democracy.

Analysis, examples and practical tips – the authors use this mix to explain what is necessary so that people can successfully talk about topics that are difficult both socially and politically.

A substantiated practical guide for political institutions, NGOs, foundations, media and corporations.

Professor Stefanie Molthagen-Schnöring teaches business communication management and is Vice President for Research and Transfer at the University of Applied Sciences in Berlin.

Dietmar Molthagen, holds a doctorate in philosophy and heads up the regional office North Germany of the Friedrich Ebert Foundation in Hamburg.

The Other Side of Russia

- A new look at Russian society
- By the SPIEGEL's long-standing Russia correspondent
- A small social history of Russia

136 pages, Dietz Verlag, 16.90 €
Publication Date: September 2019

Russian society has an old dream – the dream of freedom. Regardless of who is currently ruling the country, the dream continues. The vast majority of the population is freer than ever before, even if injustice still prevails in the country. But the semblance that society allows itself to be governed by the state without any resistance is wrong. This brilliant essay explains why.

Like so many things in Russia, the Russian dream is also contradictory. On the one hand, society expects the state to provide support in social matters. On the other hand, the people demand that they should be allowed to decide upon their own fate. This requires a freedom that is often inconsiderate and does not respect the freedom of others. Those wanting to understand Russia should read this book.

Reinhard Krumm, born in 1962, holds a doctorate in philosophy. He heads up the Friedrich Ebert Foundation's regional office for collaboration and peace in Europe. Before that, he headed up the FES offices in Central Asia and in the Russian Federation, reported as a German press correspondent from Riga and as a SPIEGEL correspondent from Moscow. He lectures East European history at the University of Regensburg.

Hitler's Bid for Africa: Colonialist Policies during the Third Reich

Hitler's colonialist, expansionist policies for Africa and overseas is a widely ignored chapter in the Nazi story. In order to reestablish Germany's "honor" after the "shameful Treaty of Versailles," the lost colonies were supposed to be reacquired and new regions were to be seized. In painstaking detail, the Third Reich laid its plans for the administration and plundering of these areas. However, as the Wehrmacht's defeats increased, Hitler's dream of a wide-reaching empire in Africa and overseas faded further into the distance.

Hans-Heinrich Lammers: Head of Hitler's Reich Chancellery

Hans-Heinrich Lammers was one of the most important and influential leaders of the Nazi system, although few ever felt the full extent of his power. Besides administering Hitler's governmental affairs and providing legal corroboration for actions deemed as "state necessities," this little-known senior Nazi also "legitimized" the persecution of the Jews and the Nazis' euthanasia program.

Lammers testified at the Nuremberg Trials, but eventually spent only few years in prison despite being responsible for the deaths of thousands.
